JENNY MARSH'S BOOK.—
Fublished This Day, and for sale at the Bookstores;
TOILING AND HOPING;
OR, THE STORY OF LITTLE HUNCHBACK.
By JENNY MARSH.

Gen. Morris, in an advance notice in The Home Journal, says:
"It is a narrative of home, and its characters are such as are met around the fireside. They do not claim the perfections of angels, or the innearfections of demons—like the unnatural demealism of many of our modern fashionable novels. In this respect they are true to life; for there are no persons entirely free from blemishes, and the worst, no matter how forbidding their moral aspect may appear, have an 'angel side' in moments of inward reflection. The book is apparently worked up from an interesting personal experience. The sivile of the authoress is of that sincere and pleasing character which proceeds from a cultivated taste, a well-stored mind, and a heart filled with emotional sympathics. Though comparatively a young writer, she gives hopeful promise of a wide and leating repuration; and we sincerely hope she may realize the justifiable anticipations of herself and publishers, on behalf of this, her mailen publication. The first extract we have marked illustrates the unhappiness congequent upon a marriage for money. It is a sweet picture, filled out with most delicate limmings."

C. S. FRANCIS & Co. publish this day an introduction and notes. By J. G. Lockhart. A new and ryised edition, with a biographical sketch of Lockhart. I vol.

"Lockhart is only known as a poet by his Spanish Hallads. Those baileds (the unnewerable proof of excellence in balleds), caught at once and live in the general ear. They have every characteristic beauty of balleds—life, rapidity, picturesqueness, suddenness, grace, quaintness, simplicity without boldness, energy without effort. We will not vouch for their fidelity to the original poems, but they have a better fidelity to the spirit of the wild, romantic and chivalrous times, when Moor end Christian met on the borders to fight and make love. They are Spanish to the very heart. [London Times.]

Author of "Miss Violet and her Offers," &c.

In one vol. of 504 pp., neally bound in Cloth. Price $125.

From The Home Journal,

"Like Fielding and the earlier English novelists, the author gives us specimens of humanity, such as he finds them—not carticatures and monstractities. His inside uts, also, partake of this fidelity to actuality; the consequence is, the work is healthy, genial, and acceptable to the thinking reader. But with all this trueness to nature, the work abounds with interest almost to piguancy. Every personage in the story, and each incident in the narrative, serve to but illustrate traits of character, or to expect the 'Sames' of Society, and that, too, with as trenchant a hand as Dickens or Macaulay—denuded, however, of any overcharged malignity or over-grought distortion."

NATIONAL QUARTERLY

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

The Second Edition of the January number of THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

The Second Edition of the January number of THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW is now ready for delivery.

Subscriptions received by the AGENT of THE REVIEW, or by C. S. FRANCIS & Co., No. 22 Broadway.

From The Morning Courier and Enquirer.

The Quarterly is well entitled to be regarded as vonerable, for it has reached an are which marks it the oldest living Quarterly in our country. It not only lives, but it lives in full vigor. It was never worther of the largest patronage than at this moment. It is edited by one of the most liberal and ascomplished scholars in the land. It draws, as it always has favour to its support, as contributors, writers of the most varied and estivated character, from every section of the Union. The names that now stand most conspicance in the highest walk of American literature first "fledged their wings" in its pages, and there laid the foundation of their success and their fame. More than forty years, under successive and always able editorial management, it has pursued its way, ministering to the highest and purest literary tastes of its readers, subserving the cause of the highest truth, holding itself above and aloof from the vulzar prejudices of the day, and contributing more than perhaps any other like instrumentality to elevate the tone of thought, to point the just ambition, to give weight and dignity to the moral, political, and intellectual aspirations of this young and rapidly growing nation. For though it has never sought for or attained what is commonly called popularity, it has always reached the most influential minds; and thus indirectly, it may be, but not the less efficiently and surely, exercised a wholesome conservative control over the catrawagnat tendencies which naturally inhere in a youthful, excitable, and enterprising people. We are glad to see, therefore, the fresh appeal which its editor and publishers are making precessive periodical, secured beyond peradventure in the mos-liberal and reliable support. It would be a national diagrace should it be left at the best to live a starvling life, or sadder yet, ro die. We trust, for the literary honor of our land, that all danger of either is past, and that, reborn into a new and vigor-ous youth, the existence and the glory of The North American are to be perpetual."
